NOTES

In addition to references to historical and mythological names, the annotations include: 1) brief forewords to capitoli in the Triumphs, mostly indicating their content; 2) explanations of obscure passages (often introduced by the formula 'hic loquitur de'); 3) biographical sketches of historical and mythological figures quoted; 4) references to relevant authorities on the events and figures quoted by Petrarch (e.g. for Triumphus Amoris III.82-84, the annotator recalls Dante's Commedia: 'francisca et paulus de quibus dantes', fol. 147r). When the anonymous annotator uses the two-column layout, concise annotations are placed in the left-hand column. A few occasional marginal annotations are also found next to the lines of some RVF poems. These annotations copy historical and mythological names, and, in a few cases, provide basic information on the poem (e.g. for RVF 136, the annotator writes 'hic loqu[e]rat de curia romana').

The distinction between the first and second part of RVF is indicated by a larger initial for RVF 264.

At fol. 1r, the first five lines of the index are written by another cursive hand and start with 'Di te[m]po in te[m]po mi si fa men dura'. Two fols. are missing: the former between fols. 164 and 165, presumably with Triumphus Fame II.136-163, Fame III.1-42, and the latter after fol. 169, with the ending of Triumphus Eternitatis; few maniculae. Between the cover and the initial flyleaf is an extract of a print with the title 'Lettera di Annibal Caro, scritta al signor Bernardo Spina'; the date of the print in the colophon is 1764. Between fol. 169 and the first final flyleaf is a flying leaf with a copy of the anonymous canzone 'Moueti ormai o desiato sposo' penned by a later hand.
