Other contents:

The ms. contains numerous Latin and vernacular works, mostly anonymous, on diverse topics. In addition to writings on literary criticism (fols. 13r-15v: 'Critica d'Alcune Commedie dell'Intronato'), the ms. includes works on philosophical matters (fols. 101r-113v: Alessandro Scotto's 'ORATIO DE PERFECTI PH[ILOSOPHI] IDEA E[T] OP[ER]IBVS QVIBVS AD EAM PERVENIATUR'; fols. 138r-140r: 'De comparatio[ne] Platonis at Aristotelis. Lectio'), on numismatics (fols. 80r-84v: Bernardo Davanzati's 'Lezione di Bernardo Dauanzati sopra Le monete. Stampata già suoi opuscoli'), on law (fols. 169r-190r: 'Disputatio utru[m] iudex delegatus sit maior iud[ic]e ordinario'), on art history (fols. 22r-23v: biographical sketches on famous artists), and literary works (fols. 194r-288r: Raffaele Maffei's Agnese: 'L'Agnese Rappresentazione delsig[no]r Proued[ittor]e Raffaello Maffei recitata in Volterra l'anno 16 [sic] e copiata da Benedett[_] Lisci l'anno 1645'; fols. 330r-336r: Latin fragments from Homer's Odyssey 'Ex Homeri Odyssea'). For a detailed list of works and incipits, see Cozzo 1897, 230-33.

NOTES

The commentary illustrates and contextualises RVF 105. The author both focuses on the literal sense of Petrarch's lines, and discusses how Petrarch's feelings evolve within the RVF. Much attention is given to clarifying single words and expressions: e.g. 'altero: ch[e] si leua da cose uili, e basse, come passa qu[est]o termine diuenta sup[er]bo' (fol. 18v).

The anonymous lecture is divided into two parts. The first part demonstrates that this is a correspondence sonnet in response to Antonio da Ferrara's 'Cesare poi che riceue il presente'. The second part rejects four criticisms elaborated by some unidentified 'spositori', namely: 1) that the historical examples listed by Petrarch do not correspond with his own feelings; 2) that there might be a contradiction between this sonnet and RVF 35; 3) that Petrarch could find other ways to hide his feelings; 4) that the depiction of Caesar contrasts with other depictions of him in Petrarch's works.
