NOTES

Da Canal's commentary aims to show, pace Filelfo and Squarciafico, that Petrarch's love for Laura was exclusively pure and those expressions perceived as otherwise are to be read metaphorically (as Ilicino did).

Throughout the commentary, several pieces of paper are pasted over some fols. in order to revise earlier exegesis (i.e. by the author-copyist himself). Many additional marginal annotations either correct the main text, or provide brief summaries, or else specify names of characters, speakers, addressees, or else highlight rhetorical elements; many maniculae. Some fols. are missing and some others are misplaced. The paper format of fols. 2-3 (B-C) and 4-8 (D-I) of the second volume differs from that of the rest of the volume.

Decorated initials for the introduction to the commentary and the first line of RVF 1; decorated initial in gold for the first letter of the commentary. A fol. from an unknown printed edition is pasted at fol. 181v (this has an architectural frame with floral and classical decorations and, on the bottom, a medallion representing an allegorical scene with a rectangular-box illustration representing Apollo crowning a monk who writes at his desk, in the upper central part). The central-lower part of the printed page (where, presumably, there was the beginning of printed text) was removed in order to let the copyist write RVF 181 in the space.
