NOTES

Beccadelli's life offers an extended biographical account that includes passages on Petrarch's habits, health, inclinations, interests, and pastimes. The last part (specifically at fols. 301r[=601]-311r [=621]) focuses on several RVF poems and capitoli of the Triumph: he hypothesizes a composition date for each of them, links them to a specific moment of Petrarch's love for Laura, and, sometimes, clarifies some of their obscure meanings.

Several marginal annotations by Beccadelli's own hand point out from which Petrarchan work (and passage) the piece of information discussed in the relative paragraph of Beccadelli's life is derived. Some other marginal annotations (also in his hand) either cancel or make changes to some passages of the main text, or even substitute an entire paragraph of the biography with a new one.

At fol. 278r[=555], a marginal note by Fontanini states that Beccadelli's life was translated into Latin and printed within Tomasini's work, Petrarca redivivus: 'L'ha stampata il Tommasini nel Petrarca rediuiuo pag. 213 edizione II. ma con proemio diuerso da questo, che è l'originale. Diuersifica pure in altre cose'. Giuseppe Valentinelli agrees with Fontanini (see CPVe, n. 98 [pp, 100-01]), yet he maintains that the version of Beccadelli's life that was translated and included by Tomasini in his work is the one contained in another ms. of Beccadelli's work (i.e. Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana, Vat. Lat. 6165 [yet 6168]).
