PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION: FORMAT

310x213 mm; I + 42 fols.

PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION: TEXTBLOCK

paper; cursive humanistic script; the first lines of Petrarch's poems set on left followed by commentary written next to them in the same line and then distributed across the page beneath each of them; within the text of the commentary, some quoted words from the commented poem are in capital letters. Each section of commentary is devoted to a single poem and before each section there is a title indicating the metrical form of the poem (e.g., 'So.' [or 'Son'], 'Canz.', 'Canz. sestina', 'Madrigale'); a blank space in the fol. is left after the end of each section of the commentary.

NOTES

The commentary includes both succinct expositions of single lines (often focusing on a single word) and discussions that take up several fols. A few annotations in the margins include names, adjectives, or verbs mentioned in the commentary.

There is a detached fol. (written in a different hand with smaller and more cursive script) with some quotations from Petrarch, and, in the bottom right, the image of a column with two facing dragons as its capital and the head, front body, and wings of a flying horse on its base. In the column's torus, we read 'Il dolce tempo della p[ri]ma etade' (RVF 23.1), in the shaft 'Gloriosa Colonna in cui s'appoggia' (RVF 10.1); on the right-hand margin of the image there are three more quotations: 'Occhi piangete accompagnate il core | che di uostro fallir morte sostiene' (RVF 84.1-2) close to the capital; 'Che Amor co suoi begli occhi al cor m'imprese' (probably a misquotation of RVF 126.11, 'ove amor co begl'occhi il cor m'aperse') and 'nelaltrui sangue già bagnato e tinto' (RVF 36.11) close to the upper part of the shaft; 'e per troppo spronar la fuga e tarda' (RVF 48.14) close to the central part of the shaft; and 'Giouane donna sotto un uerde lauro' (RVF 30.1) close to the torus.
