NOTES

Gandini's lecture can be divided into three parts. It first lists a series of ancient poets (including Catullus, Cicero, Horace, Vergil) and philosophers (Aristotle) to demonstrate that the nose is a decorous part of the human body. The lecture then illustrates positive allegorical meanings attributed to the nose such as ‘sagacia’ (sagacity) and ‘discretione’ (discretion). The third and final part explains why Petrarch did not worship Laura’s nose, arguing that he did so to prevent later readers from making negative associations about it that would be in conflict with his beloved’s perfection.

In the Florence copy, the original cover has been replaced by a modern one and three blank fols. have been added both at the beginning and at the end of the volume. Between the cover and the initial endpaper is a blue flying handwritten fol., which provides a brief bibliographic description of the volume and stresses its rarity.
