NOTES

Franceschi's lecture deals with love, and illustrates the ways in which it reveals itself (through the eyes, through behaviour and, eventually, through words). Numerous references are made to Platonic philosophy and to Boccaccio's works and other Petrarchan texts; in particular Franceschi quotes in its entirety RVF 49 (fol. 210v-211r) and a stanza from RVF 70 (fol. 213r-213v). Franceschi shows some interest in rhetorical figures. A second ms. copy of this lecture is in ms. Magl. VII, 287 of the Biblioteca Nazionale Centrale in Florence. Franceschi's lecture has been edited in Prose fiorentine II.3 (107-38).

The ms. is made up of 30 quires; on the upper margin of the first fol. of each quire, an annotation provides basic information on its content. These brief notes were composed by Giunio Carbone (1805-1881), who was in charge of the manuscript collection of the Biblioteca Nazionale Centrale of Florence from 1863. In the case of Franceschi's lecture, Carbone writes 'N. 23. Lezione di Lorenzo Franceschi sul Sonetto del Petrarca: Lasso ch'i' ardo ed altri non mel crede. c. 28 più due bianche una in principio e l'altra in fine' (fol. 190r).

Fol. 24 is followed by an unnumbered fol.; fol. 74 is followed by a smaller rectangular fol. attached to the previous with sealing wax and numbered '74bis'.
